

Articles on Sri Lanka, 1970-1973

compiled by

DAYA DE SILVA

The growing body of literature on Sri Lanka, especially in the form of periodical articles, has raised problems for both the research worker and the layman in keeping up to date with the published literature largely because the material is scattered in journals published all over the world. The same difficulty arises in keeping track of chapters on Sri Lanka in books which cover a wider area or a special theme. References to both these types of material are eventually embodied in general and special bibliographies, but the publication of such bibliographies takes time and some of the articles, especially those on current issues, lose their value and interest unless located soon after publication. For these reasons it was decided to regularly publish a check list of these items in this journal.

The list published in this issue of the Modern Ceylon Studies encompasses the years 1970-1973 inclusive, but it is expected that those that follow would cover one year at a time. They would normally include material published in all languages. However, in clearing the backlog for the years before 1974 it has not been possible to list the articles published in Sinhala and Tamil. From 1974 items in these languages will be included. These bibliographical lists will not include articles published in this journal. Nor will articles in undergraduate journals, newspapers and popular magazines be taken into account; the latter was a decision that the Editorial Board reached with some reluctance for a few research articles have been included in such publications and it could be argued that the articles in some of the journals referred to below are less than research efforts; however, problems of size and management precluded any other decision, while the alternative of a selective choice was not considered feasible.

Since the items per year would be few in number, a subject classification was not considered necessary and an alphabetical arrangement by author was favoured. This principle was extended to the somewhat larger listing generated by the years 1970-73 as well.

The subject coverage of the list (according to a decision of the Editorial Board) will be generally limited to the scope of this journal. The material relating to the sciences, medicine, engineering and technology, and the humanities (e.g. literature, archaeology and epigraphy) will, in general, be excluded. It was, however, decided to include all articles on history as the attempt to distinguish between the ancient, the medieval and the modern history of Sri Lanka is fraught with many difficulties.

It would be helpful if authors could send us an offprint of each of their recent publications and/or a list of their current publications. These should be addressed to "The Editor, Modern Ceylon Studies, University at Peradeniya, Sri Lanka".
